Some say that the king flying to Thetford, there pitcht a field with the Danes, but the Danes prevailing, the good king from thence did flee to the Castle of Halesdon aboue mentioned : where he being pursued of the Danes was there taken, and at length being bounde to a stake, there, of the raging Danes was shot to death. And thus much for the good kings.

Now as concerning those kinges which made them selues Monks (which in number be viij. or viii.) although the example be rare & straunge, and much commended of the chroniclers of that time yet I cannot rashly assent to their commendation, albeit the case therof is no matter of our history. First in altering their estate from kings to monkes, if they did it to finde more ease, and lesse trouble thereby: I see not howe that excede standeth with the office of a good man, to change his publike vocation, for respect of privat comoditie. If I feare of iudepyng & daunger did draine them therin, what praise and commendation they deserue, in so doing let the monkish histories judge what they lyseth: me seemeth so much prayse as they deserue in prouidng their owne iuste, so much they deserue againe to be discommended in forsaking the common welthe. If they did it (as most like it is) for holynesse sake, thinking in that kinde of life to serue and please God better: or to merit more toward their saluacion than in the estate of a king, therin they were far deceaneed: not knowing that the iustition which cometh of God, is to be measured & esteemed, not by mans merites, or by any perfectioun of life, or by difference of any vocation in one than another, but only by the free grace of the gol spel, which freely indueth all them, that faithfully beleue in Christ Jesu. But here will be saide against peraduencie, in the voluntary life of monkers, be fewer occasions of euils, than in kings courses, wherfore that lyf serveth more to holines, & more is to be preferred than the other. To this I aunswere, to avoid the occasions of euill is good where strenght lacketh to resist. But otherwyse, where dreyf & charge hindeth to tary, there to auoyde the occasions of euill, where rather they are to be resisted: rather declareth a weakenes of the man, the deseruench any praise. As it is truly saide of Tullie. Out of Asia, saith he, to fine a good life is no godanetoy: but in Asia where so great occasions of euils abound, there to live a good man that is praiseworthy. With the like reason I may inferre if a man be called to be a king, there not to change the vocation for boolding of occasions, but rather to resist occasions, & to keepe his vocation, declared a god & perfect man. But of these dynastes heretofore sufficient.

These things now thus premised, concerning the order & raigne of kinges, as is above preficed: consequently it remayneth to enter the tractacion of such thinges, as in the time and raigne of the forelaide kinges happened in the Church: first putting the reader againe in minde of the former persecutions within the realme, partly before touched in the time of the Britayne kinges, which speciallye were three or fourre before the commynge of Asten into Englante.

1. The first was vnder Dioclesian, and that not onely in England, but generally throughout al the Romaine Monarchie, as is above specified. In this persecution Albanus, Iulius, Aaron, with a great number more of other god Christian Britaines, were martyred for Christes name.

2. The seconde persecution or destruction of Christian faith, was by the invading of Grauus and Melga, whereof, the first was captaine of the Hunnes, the other of the Pictes.
These two tyrauntes, after the cruell slaughter of Uxula, and other, 1100. noble virgins, made their rode into Brittaine hearyng the same to be destitute of strenght of men. At what time they made miserable murder of Christies Saints, spoiling & wasting Churches, without mercy vnto either of women or children, sparing none.

3. The third persecution came by Hengist, and the Saxonnes: who likewise destroyed and wasted the christen congregations within the lande, like raging wolvies fleeing vpon the sheepe, & spilling the bloud of Christians, till Austine Ambrosius came, and restored againe the Churches destroyed.

4. The fourth destruction of Christen faith & Religion was by Gurmundus a pagan king of the Africane: who joyning in league with the Saxonnes, wrought much greuaunce to the christians of the land. In so much that Theodorus Bishop of London, and Thadioceus Bishop of Yorke, with the rest of the people so many as were left, having no place wherin to remaine with safetie, did flee some to Cornwall, and some to the mountaines of wales about the yere of our Lord 550. and this persecution remained to the tyme of Ethelberd king of Kent, an. 589.

In the raigne of this Ethelbert, which was then the 5.

king of Kent, the faith of Christ was first receaved of the Saxons or Englishmen, by the meanes of Gregory Bishop of Rome, in maner and order as here foloweth, out of old histories collected and recorded.

First then to ioyne the order of our history together: The Christe fauth first received of king Lucius, endured in Brittaine till this tyme, neare vpon the season of CCLL yeares and odde: when by Gurmundus Africenus, (as is saide) fyghting wyth the Saxonnes against the Brytanies, it was neare extinct in all the land, during the space about foure score yeares. So that the first springing of Christes Gospel in thyss lande, was an. 180. The commynge of the Saxonnes was an. 449. or an. 469. The commynge of Asten, was an. 596. From the first entring in of the Saxonnes to their compleat conquest, and the drivynge out of the Brytanies (which was aboue the latter tyme of Gadwalader) were 240. yeares. In summe from Christ to Lucias were, 180. yeares. The continuallace of the gol spel from Lucius to the entring of the Saxonnes was 302. yeares. The decay of the same to the entring of Asten, was, 143. yeares whiche being added together make from Lucius to Asten 445. from Christ to Asten they make 598. yeares. In this yeare then, 598. Asten being sent from Gregory came into England: the occasion wherupon Gregory sent hym heret was this.

In the daies of Pelagius Bishop of Rome, Gregory chauncyng to see certayne chyldren in the market place of Rome (brought thereto to be sold out of England) being faire and beautifull of visage, denraunded out of what coutry they were: and understanding they were Heathenish out of England, lamented the case of y land being so beautiful and Angelicall, to to be subiecte vnder the Prince of darknes. And asking moreouer out of what province they were it was answered, out of Deyra, a part of Northsay-ons: wherof as it is to be thought, that which we now call Deyham takerb his name. Then he alluding to the name of Deyra, these people (saith he) are to be delivred de Dei ira, which is from Gods wrath, Moreouer vnderstanding the kings name that prouince to be Alle (aboue mentioned) alluding likewise to his name: there (saith he) ought Alleluia to be song to the living God. wherupon beynge moued and desirous to go and helpe the conuersyon of that country, was not permitted of Pelagius and the Romane for that tyme to accomplish his dede. But afterwarde being Bishop himself next after Pelagius, he sent therethen the forlaunde Asten with other preachers neare about to the nuber of xl. But by the waye, howe it happened I car-raye: As Asten with his company were passing in they journey, such a sodaine feare entred in their harts (that as Antonius saith) they returned all. Other wiste that Asten was sent backe to Gregory againe, to releads them of that wage so dangerous and uncertaine, amoungst such a barberous people: whose language neither they knewe, nor whose iudenes they were able to resist. The Gregory with pithy persuasions confirming and conforting him, sent him againe with letters both to the Bishop of Arevalensis, willing hym to helpe and aide the said Asten, and his company in all whatsoeuer his neede required. Also other letters he directed by the foresaid Asten, vnto his fellowes, exhorting them to go forward boldy in the Lords work, as by the tenour of the laid Epistle here followyng maye appere.

Gregorius seruus seruorum Dei, seruus Domini nostri. Quia melius fuerat bona non incipere, quam ab ijs quae copta sunt cogitatione retrosum redire, &c. In Englalre. Gregory the seruant of Gods seruaunts, to the seruaunts of the Lord. Forasmuch as it is better not to take good things in hande, then after they be begon, to think to rewolt backe from the same againe therefore now you may not nor cannot (deare children) but with all feruent study and labor, must needs go forward in that good busines, whiche through the helpe of God you haue wel begunne.
Neither let the labor of your journey, nor the slanderous tonguas of men appale you, but that with all instaunce and feruency yee proceede, and accomplithe the thing which the Lorde hath ordeyned you to take in hande: knowing that your great trauell shall be recompensed with rewarde of greater glorie hereafter to come.
Therefore as we sende here Asten to you againe, whom also we haue ordeneid to be your governour, so do you humbly obey him in all thinges, knowing that it shall be profitable so for your soules, whatsoeuer at his admonition yee shall doe. Almighty God with his grace defend you and graunt me to see in the eternall country the fruite of your labour, that although I can not laboure as I woulde wyth you, yet I may be found perteeker of your retriture, for that my will is good to labour in the same fellowship with you together. The Lord God keep you safe, most deare and welbeloued children. Dated the x before the Calendes
