

For where as the preface of the statute standeth only upon matter of treason, conceived by false suggestion and wrong information. The body of the sayd statute whiche shoulde follow vpon the same, runneth only vpon matter of heresie, pertaining to the Ordinaries, as by every hauchē thereto may appearre.

(F) The body of the statute an. 2. Reg Hen.5. cap. 7. examined.

(F) For first where he sayth, at the instaunce & request of the ordinaries or their commissaries, &c. Hereby it appeareth, this to be no cause of treason, nor felonie. For that every man of duety is bound, and by the lawes of the Realme may arrest & apprehend a traitour, or a felon, if he carre where otherwise by this statute an officer is not bound to arrest him which offendeth in case of this statute, without request made by the ordinaries or their commissaries, and therefore this offence seemeth neither to be treason, nor felonie.

(G) Secondly, where it foloweth that the same ordinaries and commissaries doe pay for their costes, &c. This allowance of the officers charges in this sort, pouereth this offence neither treason nor felonie.

(H) Thirdly, where the statute willetteth the king to bee answered of the yeare, day, & waſt, &c. By this also is proved the offence not to be treason. ¶ Els in cases of treason, the whole inheritance (I trow, maister Lope, speakeing as no great skilfull lawyer) is forfeit to the prince.

(I) The fourth argument I take out of these words of the statute, where as such lands and tenementes which be holden of the ordinaries, are willed wholly to remaine to the king as forfeit, &c. whereby it is manifest, that the Prelates (for their matter of Lollardie only) were the occassioners and procurers of this statute: and therefore were barred of the benefite of anye forſettirg thereby, as good reason was, they shoulde. And thus it is notorious, that the preface running specially and principally vpon treason, and the statute running altogether vpon points of heresie, do not well cohere nor ioyne together.

(K) Fifthly, In that such persons indicted, shal be delinced vnto the Ordinaries of the places, &c. It can not bee denied, but that this offence concerneth no maner of treason. For so much as Ordinaries can not be judges in cases of treason, or felonie, by the lawes of our Realme, Bracton, in fine, i. Libri.

(L) Sixthly, by the inditements provided not to be taken in evidence, but only for information, before the Judges spirituall, &c. it is likewise to be noted: to what end these inditements were taken, to wit, only to infoyme the ordinaries, which can not be in cases of treason.

(M) Lastly, where it foloweth toward the end of this statute, touching escape or breaking of prison, &c. by this it may lightly be ſinck, whereto all the purpose of this statute diuinit, that is, to the ſpeciall escape of the L. Cobham out of Tower, to this end to haue his lands & poſſeſſions forfeit vnto the King. And yet the ſame escape of the Lord Cobham in this statute conſidered, is taken by Maister Justice Stanforde in Lib. primo of the pieces of the crowne cap. 33. to be an escape of one arrested for heresie, where he ſpeaketh of the case of the Lord Cobham.

Whereouer as touching the partes of this foileſaid statute, how will you ioyne these two hauchances together, where as in the former part is ſaid, that the lands of ſuch perious coniuit, ſhall be forfeit to the king, not before they be dead: And afterward it foloweth, that their goodes and poſſeſſions ſhall be forfeit at the day of their arrest, to that king. But heerein ſtandeth no ſuch great doubt nor matter to be weied. This is without all doubt, and notorious, euidently, and moft manifestly may appear, by all the arguments and whole purpoſe of the statute: that as well the preamble and preface thereof, as the whole body of the ſaid statute was made, framed, & proceſſed only by and through the iuſtiuation, information, and exicitation of the Prelates, & the Popiſh Clergie, not ſo much for any treason committed againſt the king: but only for feare and hatte of Lollardie, tending againſt their law, which they moſt dyded & abhorred, then ever any treason againſt the Prince. And then to ſet the king & all the ſtares againſt them, whereby the moſt readily to worke their diuſpatch, they thought it best and none ſo compendious a policie, as prietely to ioyne treason together with their Lollardie. Wherein the poore men beeing once intangled, coulde no wayes escape deſtruclion. Papa concilium calidum.

This M. Lope, haue I ſaid, and ſay againe, not as one absolutely determining vpon the matter. At the doyng wherof as I was not present my ſelue, ſo with your owne Halle, I may and do leaue it at large, but as one leadyng the reader by all conjectures and arguments of probability and of due circumſtances, to coniider with themſelves, what is further to be thought in these old accustomed praſtities and proceedings of the Prelates, Protesting more-ouer (M. Lope) in this matter to you, that those Chrontclers which you ſo much ground vpon, I take them in this matter, neither as witness(es) ſufficient, nor as Judges competent, who as they were not themſelves preſent at the deed done, no more then I, but ouely ſolewng vncertaine rumours, and wordes of courfe and office, bringing with them no certayne triall of that which they do affirme, may therin both be deceiued themſelves, and alſo deceiuing you, and other which depend vpon them.

And hererto concerning this ſtatute enough. Out of which ſtatute you ſee (M. Lope) that neither your Chrontclers, nor you can take any great aduantage, to proue any treason in the Lord Cobham or in his felowes, as hath bene hererto abundantly declared in the premuſles.

It remained further, that for almuſch as you in your ſixt Dialogue with your authoř Edward Halle, do alledge the records Et publica iudicij Acta, to difame theſe men for traytors (although what records they be, you bring forth neuer a word) I therefore in their defence do anſwer for them, which can not now auinſwer for themſelves. And because you, to accule them do mention a certaine record, and yet do not ſhew vs what record it is, and peraduenture can not, if ye would: I haue taken the paines therefore, for the loue of them whom you ſo hate, to ſearch out ſuch Reſordes, whereby any occaſion can be raiſed againſt them. And firſt will declare the commission granted, then the inditement commenſed againſt them.

The which commission, and inditement, albeit in conuenience of wordes will ſeeme to minster much ſuſpition againſt them, to the ſimple Reader, before he be better acquainted with theſe ſubtile dealings and praſtities of Prelates: yet truſſing vpon the goodneſſe of the cauſe, which I ſee here ſo ſafely and ſlightely to be handled, I nothing feare nor doubt, to produce the ſame out of the Records in Latine as they ſtand: to the intent that when the craftie handling of the aduertiseries ſhall be diſclosed, the true ſimplicite of the innocent, to the true harted Reader, ſhall the moſe better appeare. The wordes firſt of the Commission, here folow vnder written: which when thou ſhalt heare, let the not trouble thy minde, gentle reader, I beleve thee, before thou understand further, what packing and ſubtile conueyance lieth couered and hid vnder the ſame.

¶ In Rotulo patent. de anno primo
Henrici quinti.

R. Dilectis & fidelibus suis Willielmo Roos de Hamlak, Henrico le Scrop, Willielmo Croiomer maiori Ciuitatis ſuæ London. Hugoni Huls, Iohanni Preston, & Ioanni Merton ſalutem. Sciatis quid cum non plenus (A) informemur, ac notorie & manifeſte dinoscatur, quod quam plures ſubditii nostri Lollardi vulgarie nuncupati, ac alij mortem nostram contra ligacione ſue debitum proditorie imaginauerunt, ac quam plura alia, tam in fidei catholice, quam ſtatus dominorum & magnum regni nostri Angl. tam ſpiritualium quam temporalium deſtruclionem proposuerunt, ac diuersas congregations, & alia conuenticula illicita pro nephando propoſito ſuo in hac parte per implend. ſeruent in nostri exhereditationem ac Regni nostri deſtruclionem manifestam: Nos huiusmodi Lollardos ac alios praedictos, iuxta eorum demerita in hac parte caſtigari & puniri volentes, ac de fidelitate & circumſpectione vestris plenus confidentes: aſſignauimus vos quinque, quatuor, & tres veſtrum, quorum vos praefati maior & Hugo, duos eſſe volumus Iuſtic, noſtros, ad inquidem per facrum proborum & legal. hominum de ciuitate praedicta & ſuburbijs eiusdem, ac de Com. Midd. tam inſr. libertates, quam ext. per quos rei veritas melius ſcri poterit de omnibus & ſingulis proditoribus & inſurrectionibus per huius modi Lollardos in ciuitate, ſuburbijs, & com. praedictis factis & perpetratis, nec non de omnimodo proditoribus inſurrectionibus, rebellionibus, & felonijſ in ciuitate, ſuburbijs, & com. praedictis, per quoscumque, & qualitercumque factis ſive perpetratis, & ad easdem proditiones inſurrectiones, rebelliones, & felonias audiend. & terminand. ſecundum legem & conſuetudinem Regni nostri Angl. Et ideo vobis mandamus, quod ad certos, &c. quos, &c. quorum, &c. ad hoc prouideritis diligentes ſuper premisis fac. inquisitions & premiſa omnia & ſingula auditias & terminetis in forma praedicta faciū, &c. Saluis, &c. Mandauimus enim vi- cecomitibus noſtris Lond. & Midd. quod ad certos, &c. quos, &c. quorum, &c. eius ſcire fac. venire faciēt coram vobis, &c. quorum, &c. tot &c. de Balliuſ ſua, tam inſr. libertates, quam extra per quos & c. & inquiri. In cuius &c. I. R. apud Welfm. (B) x. die Ianuarij. Per ipſum Regem.

The wordes of Commiſſion
againſt
the Lord Cobham.
(A)

By theſe high and tragical wordes in this commiſſion ſent downe againſt the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton, and their felowes: It may peraduenture ſeeme to the ignorant and ſimplie reader, ſome hainous crime of treason

(B)

Justice Stanforde
of the plees of
the crowne, lib.
1. cap. 33.

The firſt procu-ers of this ſtatute.

Practise of prelates to couple treafon with heresie.