Ex Suctonie.

The ende and deceasse of king Edward the sixt.

Thus haning discoursed thinges done and past, vnder the raigne of king Edward, such as seyned not vnguentfull to be knoynge, we will now draw to the ende and deaſt of this blessed king, our young Josias, who about a yeaſe and a halfe after the deaſt of the Duke of Somerſet hys Uncle, in the yeaſe of our Lord 1553, entring into the 17. yeaſe of his age, and the 7. yeaſe of his raigne, in the moneth of June, was take from vs, for our ſummes no doyn. Whome if it had ſo pleased the good wiſe of the Lord to haue ſpared with longer life, not unlyke it was by all coſcience ſprobable to be euerſed by thote his towarde and blisſed beginnings, but proceeding ſo as he began he would haue reformed ſuche a Common wealth hecce in the Realme of England, as by god cauſe it might haue bene ſayd of hym, y was ſayd in y olde time of the noble Empereur Auguſtus in refouning and aduauncing the Empire of Rome: Quam quoniam tateriam (vt aiebat) accepit, māmorem reliquit. Which Empereur he receuēd (he ſayd) a bucke, but he left it offe the ſhouldre. But the condition oþ this Realme, and the vniueſt behauour of Englith people (whole propterit is priuily to abafe the faythe of the Bofpell when it is offered) deſerued no ſuche benefite of ſo blisſed a reformation, but rather a contrarie plague of deſormation, ſuche as hapned after his raigne, as ye shall heare (the Lord grauntynge) in the nexte Discenes dayes that folloƿeth.

Thus then this godly and vertuous Prince, in the time and maner aboue mentiſhed was cut from vs, of whose bodye life and deaſt haue bene partly alſoþ declared. Newellike to haue ſome monument of him remaining to remembre the godly naſtre and gentle diſpoſition of that Prince, we will addreſſe for a remembraunce, thys little Epifle of his own hand wyrting to the Archb. of Canterbury, his Godfather as followeth.

E Th puer ſum colendissime Suceptor, non tamen immemor ſum vel officij erga te mei, vel humanitatis tuae quam indies mihi exhibere ſtudes. Ne exciderūt mihi humanissimae tuae litterae p̄fide diuī Petri ad me datæ. Quibus ante hac respondere nolui, non quod illas negl̄ xerim, aut non minerim, ſed ut illarum diuerna meditatione truerer, fidelique memoria reponerem, atque deum: bene ruminatis pro mea virili responderem. Proinde affectum erga me tuum vere paternum, quem in illis exprefſi, amplector & venor, op: que: vt multos viuas annos, tuoq: pio ac ſalubri confilio pergas eſte mihi venerandus pater. Nam pietatem ante omnia mihi amplectendam & exofculandam eſte dico, quoniam diuus Paulus dicit: Pictus ad omnia utilis eſt. Optime valeat tua paternitas in plurimos annos. Non magis poterit ipſa me ſecutare ſalus (ſili in Christo chriſt-ime) quam ſalus tua. Mea vita non dicenda eſt vita abſitua & ſalute & valitudine. Quapropter cum te incolumem ac ſaluum intelligo, vitam etiam mihi integrā eſte & incolumem ſentio. Neque certe absentia mea tam eſt iniucunda tibi quam ſunt litterae tuae pericula mihi. Quia arguant tibi iuxta adefle & ingenium dignum tanto principe, & preceptorem dignum tanto ingenio. Ex quibus tuis litteris te ſic litteras video colere, ut interim doctrinæ coeleſtis tua nequaquam minimisſit cura: que cuique ſit cura, non potest illum queuis cura frangere. Perge igitur qua via incepiti Princeps illuſtiſſime, & Sparta quannactus es hanc ornā, ut quam ego per literas video in te virtutis luce m̄, adem olim illuminet vniuersitatem tuam Angliam. Nō ſcri-bam prolixius, tum quidem ut me intelligas breuitate non nihil affici, tum etiam quod credam te & tate quidem adhuc parvulum paruo gaudere, & ſimilem ſimili: tum etiam patera ne impolita mea oratio in cauſa fit, quod genero illa tua in doles barbare vi-tium contrahat.

The report of the Princes Scholemaster, in commendation of his towardnes to the Archb.

R Ight honorable and my ſingular god Lorde, after my most hary commendations: the oportunitie of this meſſenger forcer me to wryte at this tyme, haſing little matter but onely to ſignify vnto your grace, that my Lorde grace your godſonne is myr and in health, and of ſuch towarde-nes in learning, godliuſſe, gentlenes and all honest qualties, þ both you and I, and all this realme ought to thank him and take hym for a ſingular gift ſente of God, an impe worthy of ſuch a father: for whome we are bound ſine inter-missione, to render to God moſt hary thankes, wryth moſt humble request of hys long & proſperous continuance. He haſh learned almoſt ſoure bookeſ of Cato to conſerue, to perle, and to ſay wrythout booke. And of hys owne courage nowe in the latter Booke he will neuer haue at one time 14. Certeſ which he knoweth pleaſantly and perfectly, be-ſides thinges of the Bible, Sarcellium Viuſ, Aſops Fables, and Latin making, wheroſ he haſh ſent your Grace a hilt tall. Dominus Iohannes te dñeſiſſime ſeruer.

This miche hechero haſtinge declared, conchinge the worthy vertues and lingualre towardeſſe of this godly impe, king Edward the ſixt, althoſh I haue not, neither can insert all things due to his commendation, but am enforced to let paſſe many memorablie matters, well worthy to be proſecuted, if they might haue come to our hands: yet this one iuſt note I thought not to overſlip (ſomthinge to reccreate the wery reader in ſuche a doſfull ſtorye) being notiſhed to me by one M. Edward Hunderhill, who wayengy ſame tyme, in the rett of his ſtowdes penſioners, and men at armes, as Sy: Henry Bates, M. Robert Hat, M.
Henry Harſton, and M. Stafforſon hearde these wordes betweene the king and his comſale.

The relation and reſtimoniſe of which perſone and per-ſons above named, come to this effect, that king Edward the
ſ. the 4. yeaſe of his raigne, being then but 13. yeaſes old and upward, at Greenewiche vpon S. Georges day, when he was come from the ſermon, into y preſence chamber, there being his uncle the Duke of Somerſet, the Duke of Nor-thumb. with other Lordes & Knights of that order, called the order of the Garter, he ſaid vnto them: My Lordes, I pray you, what ſainte is S. George, that we here ſo honour hym? At which queſtion the other Lordes being all aſtonied, the L. Treaſurer (þ then was) perceiving this, gaue anſwer, and ſaid: If it please your Maieſtie, I did neuer read in any hystorie of S. George, but only in Legenda aurea, where it is thus ſet downe, that S. George ou with his ſword, and ran the Dragon through with his ſpear. The king, when he could not a greate white ſpeak for laughyng, at length ſaide: I pray you my Lorde, and what did he with his ſword the white? That I can not tell your maieſtie, ſaid he. And ſo an end of þ question of godl. George.

Now to returne againe from whence we haue digeſted, which is to ſignifie ſome part of the order & manner of his godly departing: as the tyme approched when it pleaſed almighty God to call this young king from vs, whiche was the 6. day of Iulij, the yeaſe aboue ſayde, aboue three houres before his deaſt, this Bodly childe, his eyes being closed, ſpeaking to hymſelue, & thinking none to haue heard hun, made this prayer as followeth.

The prayer of king Edward before his deaſt.

Lord God, deliuer me out of thiſ miserie & wretched life, & take me among thy choſen: how be it not my will, but thy wil be done: Logiſ I commit my ſpirit to thee. Oh Lord thou knowell howe happy it were for me to be with thee: yet for thy cho-ſens ſake ſend me life and health, that I may truly ſerue thee. Oh my Lord God, blesſe thy people, and ſuſtaine thy inheritance. Oh Lord God, ſave thy choſen people of England. Oh my Lord God, defend this Realme from papistrie, and mauntaine thy true religion, that I and my people may praife thy holy name, for thy ſonne Ihesu Christes ſake.

Then turned he his face, & ſeeing who was by him, ſaide unto them: Are ye ſo night, I thought you had bene further off.
Then Doct. Owen ſaide, We heard you ſpeake to your ſelfe, but what you ſaide we knewe not. Be then (after his fashion ſim-ply) laid, I was praying to God. The laſt words of his paings were theſe: I am ſaint, Lord haue mercy upon me, & take my ſpirit. And thuz he yeelded vp the ghost, leauing a wo-full kingdom behinde vnto his ſister. Albeit he in his will hadde excluded his ſister Marye from the ſuccellion of the crowne, becauſe of her corrupt religion: yet þ plague which God had destinate vnto thiſ ſuſfull Realme, coulde not ſo be voided, but that ſhee beinge the elder and daughter to king Henry, ſucceeded in poſſeſſion of thiſ crowne. Of whose dreadfull and bloudy regimant, it remaineth nowe con-ſequently to diſcou're.
